Opera is one of the most popular modern browsers all over the world (together with Firefox, Chrome and Edge), and its reputation has been established throughout numerous years of research into improving its stability, security and feature-set. Just like all the other mentioned browsers, you can visit websites, add bookmarks and explore the download history, as well as install extensions, however there are some elements that help make Opera stand out. Smooth user experience This browser aims to make things as simple as possible not only for experts, but also for novices, and this is why it packs several tools that are meant to make their lives easier. For example, Opera packs integration with WhatsApp, Facebook Messenger and Instagram, so you no longer need to run third-party apps or keep several tabs open for the web-based clients. You also get a built-in weather forecast that displays the details about your chosen location (it can be disabled with ease if you are not pleased with it). You can also replace the default browser wallpaper with one of the available options or a custom image of your choosing. Security-related features In terms of user security, Opera researchers try their best to keep the user safe without restricting any actions, so all the features are not intrusive in any way, you just set them once and they run in the background. This is the behavior for the ad blocker and tracker blocker, as they do their job without constantly showing which data they blocked, yet tech-savvy users can still examine it if they need to. As for the integrated VPN, it comes in handy when you want to access online content that you are banned from because of your geographical location. Unlike dedicated third-party solutions, you do not get a limited amount of data you can use, so you can enjoy its features without any limits. Conclusion All in all, Opera lives up to its reputation due to its committed team of researchers that strive to provide users with simplicity and appealing GUI, but without sacrificing anything on the security front. Worked fine for me. Edit: I used the IPVanish app on the phone. Opera uses proxies by default. It's not clear from the description if this feature is only for use with their browser or also with other apps like the browser. They have a browser extension for Firefox which adds the same proxy feature, but I don't use that one. It can also be adjusted

You might not realize it but your credit card is a valuable business asset. If you're like most small business owners you don't think of your credit card information as anything more than a means of payment. But the truth is, your credit card information is an investment. It provides customers with a way to trust you and your business with their credit card information. And like an investment, you need to protect and take care of it to keep it from losing value. For this reason, many business owners get lost in the weeds of PCI compliance. Unlike PCI, it's not a checklist. It's more of a long term strategy for how to safely handle credit card data. It takes more time to implement, but the upside is a company can relax knowing their security and customer's credit card data are protected from the beginning. You can't be afraid to use your credit card as a customer payment option. Your customers want it, you have to give it to them. But that doesn't mean they have to trust your business. Just be sure to protect their data. Here's how to make sure you are doing so. First things first. Establishing the right PCI Process. PCI compliance is more than just a checklist. It's a strategy. You have to set your strategy up for success. Achieving compliance doesn't just require that you know all the regulations. It requires that you develop a comprehensive strategy to use data properly. Establishing a PCI Strategy: Understand the Impact and Risks: Use Data Models: Understand, Measure, and Report: Limit the Scope: Establish Controls: Provide Assurances: Protect the Network: The effectiveness of your PCI process isn't just measured by the number of compliance requirements you check off. It should be measured by how well you protect your business' data. It should be measured by how well you design your strategy so that your data isn't underutilized. It should be measured by how well you develop controls to keep data within the network. Achieving PCI Compliance: Data should be managed in a way that is compliant, secure, and effective. When you store customer data you're storing their assets. You're allowing a business partner to use their information to transact with your business and capture revenue. When it comes to protecting that data, there are two goals: making sure your data is secure and safe, and making sure it's fully utilized. Security and usage both have to be considered when protecting data. That's the difference between compliance and actual compliance. Your data must be secure to avoid theft. It must be used in the way it was designed to be used. Your data must be used to provide customers with a great experience and to
