Maintop's main feature is the ability to merge.Q: Regular expression: How to check if a string contains a word of user typed I am new to regular expression. I want to check whether a word that user typed is not included in the string that I have. For example: String test = "this is the test string"; If user typed "new string", it returns true. If user typed "test", it returns false. Anyone know this? A: First of all, don't forget to escape your string. string test = @"this is the test string"; string userInput = "new string"; bool result = Regex.IsMatch(test, @"\b" + userInput + @"\b", RegexOptions.IgnoreCase); A: \b search for word boundary. EDIT: use double backslash in the end. \b use single backslash in the definition. It is possible to confuse the compiler. Also you can use RegexOptions.Singleline to make a match only in one line.

string test = "this is the test string";
string userInput = "new string";
bool result = Regex.IsMatch(test, @"\b" + userInput + @"\b", RegexOptions.IgnoreCase);

And: As Tim mentioned it is a better way to use string.Split.

It has been a very busy week. The last week of school, and many of the people we didn't know last week are here this week. Remember this when you are reading your contract. You want to be prepared. I wonder what happens if someone wants to go to your dental school, but knows nothing of it. You will have to sign a contract saying that what you are doing is practice in Dentistry. This is the contract. We are in the library talking about it. Blog Archive
