My favorite story about Google Chrome is that a certain role model is an African American and he is even a Catholic. So what do you think the following is a joke or the fact? This is a short story of Google Chrome's browser that we could not give up on. ----- "Google has said it does not believe people should go where it is known to cut corners. Just because its competitors are not yet there does not mean Google can be complacent, it said." "The internet is how the world thinks, and you can't hide from that. But if you want to change the world, you have to be willing to give it a try." "Google's bottom line is 'don't be evil' and for the most part, they've done that. There are parts of the world where Google has been accused of behaving like the middlemen they are, and that's a problem." "Google Chrome is a small, open source project, but its reach is global, so it's no surprise the company has come under criticism for how it handles user data." "Google says it is not doing enough to protect the privacy of its users." "Google needs to protect the privacy of users who don't want to use Chrome as well." ----- In his new role as Chief Executive Officer, Google Chrome is Larry Page's baby. "Google was born of computer programmers who wanted to make the web faster, Google was born of the search engine that could be used for pretty much anything, it was born of the question that struck us all, 'why not search?', it was born of search, and Google Chrome was born of that and the people who love the web." "But if you really want to know the answer to 'why not Chrome?' it's about being the leader in the Internet. That's the most important thing. It's about being the leader in the Internet because we believe that it will help people in the future." "Google's bottom line is 'don't be evil', and for the most part, they've done that. There are parts of the world where Google
