Adobe Illustrator® _Learn more about Adobe Illustrator_`www.adobe.com/products/illustrator.html` Adobe Illustrator (www.adobe.com/products/illustrator.html) is an incredible illustration tool. It enables you to create your own line-drawing packages and manipulate existing ones. It can be a little tricky to understand the ins and outs of the program, but you don't have to know much to begin with. Simply download the free trial version and start using it. If you're serious about learning Illustrator, I suggest getting a book that covers the software as a whole. Most books that discuss Adobe Illustrator deal with only a specific part of the program, but the _Adobe Illustrator for Dummies_ by Eric Brewer and Robin Williams, available as a paperback ($27.95) and as a hardcover ($39.95), will get you started with the most important features and workflows. Q: Make a toggle class on JS input type=checkbox I'm trying to make a toggle class on checkboxes, but my knowledge of JS is very limited. I have input type="checkbox" and I'm trying to have one of several classes applied to the box if it's checked, and not applied if it's not checked. Here's my code so far:

```
$('#visibility_form').click(function() { if ($(this).is(":checked")) { $(".class for checkbox").addClass("hide-button-on-form-checkbox"); } else { $(".class for checkbox").removeClass("hide-button-on-form-checkbox"); } });
```

A: You would have to add/remove a class to the actual checkbox itself. `$('#visibility_form').click(function() { $(this).toggleClass('checked'); });`

Q: Variable initialization inside of a function I want to initialize a constant variable that must be shared by many of the functions in my program. So I just want a way to make sure that all the functions can read and write it at the same time. I know there is no real use for defining a constant variable inside a function, but then how can I make sure that it gets initialized before the functions start? Pseudo code: `int a = 0; void func1() { // do something a = 4; } void func2() { // do something a = 5; } void main() { a = 10; }`

A: You can use a static local variable. `static int a = 0; void func1() { // do something a = 4; } void func2() { // do something a = 5; }`

Differentiation of stem cells into neurons and glial cells from neural progenitor cells. Among the central nervous system stem cells, the radial glia cells in the embryonic forebrain and the neural stem cells in the adult brain have been indicated to differentiate into both neurons and astrocytes. Differentiation of radial glia cells into neurons occurs during normal embryonic development. In the adult brain, the neural stem cells in the subventricular zone are the only cell type known to differentiate into neurons. However, whether the radial glia cells in the adult brain also differentiate into neurons has been controversial. Here we show that human radial glia cells express neuron-specific proteins, and that treatment of the cells with N2a conditioned medium induces the cells to differentiate into neurons. Using this culture system, we also show that radial glia cells express a variety of transcription factors: OCT6, SF1, LMX1A and PAX6. In addition, when the radial glia cells are transplanted into the optic system of chick embryos, they differentiate into neurons. Taken together, these data indicate that human radial glia cells in the adult brain are able to differentiate into neurons, and that the transcription factors expressed by these cells control this differentiation. The present study also shows that human neural progenitor cells can be induced to differentiate into neurons and astrocytes in vitro, and that the neural progenitor cells can induce the chick optic fibres to form networks in vivo.
