As Benjamin Bennet and David Mondel learned, peace and quiet at Massachusetts College of Art and Design are the exception, not the rule. The two students are co-founders of Wilder House. The all-women's residential college in Brookline, Mass., is increasingly well known for its commitment to student involvement. Though its current count is only 44 students, enrollment is capped at 200. "I started out helping organize events and serving on committees and eventually I got onto [the executive board] as an adviser," said Bennet, a junior. "In my mind, it was going to be an all-women's school, but it started out as co-ed. I think it's only a testament to how supportive the staff is, and all the work we do here." Other colleges' co-ed environments have become breeding grounds for unwanted drinking and partying. Wilder House is different. As Bennet explained, college is a new place for a woman. It's an environment for learning, not for partying. "We didn't want to be like a sorority," said Bennet. "So we just decided that living together as a college, we would support each other. We would be there for each other, not have any parties." Wilder House's approach to student culture is more rooted in responsibility than in partying. 'Not everyone needs the approval of their peers to move forward in life,' said executive board member and senior Denis Davis. 'We help each other to take time for ourselves and get our social lives in order.' "The students here [are] very mature," said Wilder House Director of College Life Maria Marko. "They're ready to lead." Wilder House, which recently celebrated its second anniversary, is a direct extension of The Feminist Art Institute (FAI). The organization — which Wilder House shares space with — was founded in 2002 by visual artist Ellen Stewart to promote a community of women who were interested in feminism and the arts. "What you hear a lot of times about these colleges is: 'This is great, but it's all women,'" said Davis. "In reality, it's the women who are really taking the initiative to make the difference at this point." The reason for Wilder's co-ed status is because of the fact that students here are permitted to live where they wish. "At a certain point, you have to make decisions. It's an extremely important issue

Association of ovarian fibroblast growth factor receptor-2 and serum concentration of inhibin-beta(B) in postmenopausal Chinese women. Ovarian fibroblast growth factor receptor-2 (FGFR-2) is known to be a key component in the control of folliculogenesis and oocyte maturation. Inhibin-beta(B) (inh-beta(B)) is a marker for oocyte maturation in women. To explore the relationships between ovarian FGFR-2 and serum inh-beta(B), serum concentrations of these 2 markers were measured in 42 postmenopausal Chinese women. In the postmenopausal women, mean serum FGFR-2 was significantly higher in the group with an inh-beta(B) level less than or equal to the median value (22.4+/-10.6 ng/ml) compared with that in the group with an inh-beta(B) level greater than the median value (13.7+/-6.1 ng/ml). Serum FGFR-2 significantly correlated with inh-beta(B) with a correlation coefficient of 0.364 (PQ: Why does my fadeIn() function keep rendering the window over and over?
