I am trying to export some images from a list of images stored in my computer. I am not an expert in Python and I just want to know how to implement this code (below), this is just an example. What changes should I make on the code, because the number of images will be different: import os import glob import Image import numpy as np # Get a list of images, and write a directory listing def directory_listing(directory): the_path = os.path.join(directory, '') print the_path for file in glob.glob(the_path): print file #A directory path (e.g. directory = '/home/user/images') directory = '/home/user/images/graphics' directory_listing(directory) A: I see a few things that aren't mentioned. From your comments, you're passing directory to the function, but directory is a string. It should probably be passed as an argument to directory_listing() import os import glob
