: Honorable Mentions Everyone was right about UCLA. They were sort of a surprise team. They had high expectations and they met them with an extremely respectable campaign; top-5 in most polls. Much respect to the Bruins, and I suppose we should all be happy they've made the tournament. But not in the way we'd all like to see. First of all, Kevin Zabo will be a major name by mid-March. His numbers weren't great, as always, but he was very solid as one of the team's leading scorers. The best UCLA recruit and the leading scorer in the league will be a tremendous talent. KZ will be a top-10 pick in June, and UCLA will be much more competitive than I think we thought they would be. But we won't get to appreciate this team because of that slow-starting Big East regular season. As we saw last year, the early-season games can be pretty tedious. This year's quality was exactly the same with only a few big omissions. I think this was justifiable: You have to deal with the newness of your program and the lack of your new guys. I think programs will continue to show up in the last week and surprise people, but I think we might have enjoyed UCLA a bit more if they had knocked off a regular title contender in the league opener like Pitt did in week 1. But I can't say the same for Arizona, my favorite team. The Wildcats' new roster is finally producing and I'm more than pleased. Danny Granger's been as impressive as can be and the point guard play of Justise Winslow and Gabe York will be very good. Now it's just a matter of getting wins under Pac-12 winning coach Sean Miller in the conference. 6. South Carolina Jamie Squire/Getty Images 2011-2012 Preseason Rank: 16 League Rank: 17 The Gamecocks have already played one of the most entertaining Pac-12 seasons. South Carolina is a program of extremes, and maybe it's for the best right now—the guys who don't play often are now taking advantage to show what they can do. Chris Silva is the team's leading scorer, and he'll be a nice, productive player, but the real showstopper has been freshman Devin Booker. He's been explosive, too explosive. His numbers and performances speak for themselves (record-setting 17-point, 13-
