A polycarbonate resin is used in various applications because of its excellent mechanical characteristics such as impact resistance and transparency. However, the polycarbonate resin has a defect in that its heat resistance is not satisfactory. Thus, various attempts have been made to improve its heat resistance. For example, a polycarbonate resin is mixed with a styrene-based resin having a high heat resistance, and some attempts have been made to improve the heat resistance of the resulting composition. In particular, when a styrene-based resin is mixed with a polycarbonate resin to obtain a composition has high performance in terms of mechanical characteristics, but has a defect in that it is inferior to a polyester resin in terms of heat resistance. The present invention provides a composition having sufficient heat resistance and mechanical properties. Q: Identifying a Debutante. I'm writing a modern mystery, in which a debutante falls victim to a nasty murder. The victim turns out to be an uptight, egocentric society lady of a certain age who has everything going for her. The murderer's motive is his love for her, but he gets caught by a detective who is devoted to her and prepared to throw the book at him when he's released. That is all I can tell about the victim except that she is a deb, and she is a rose of a certain age. Now, what do I do for the murderer? A: Generally, it's "a lady of a certain age who has everything going for her", as you specified, but I'd suggest looking up the term "blue blooded," regardless of how rich or poor the family actually is. A "blue blooded lady" would be appropriate for your problem. Also, "upt
