I was attracted to making this game because of the unique gimmick of the game. After the game ended and I was sitting at a friends house the first thing I asked was: "Who is this game for? I mean the main characters role would be what to you think? Well they never met. They never saw each other. They are never supposed to meet. Those of you who know about my Persona addiction might be able to guess how this went. I was driving around that little neighborhood area and it hit me like a ton of bricks. There is a reason this game is so well received. I could care less about the usual "First Time Game Dev" bragging rights. There are no bragging rights that matter in this game. The game comes with a story, and comes with a purpose. The only way you can earn the bragging rights is to play the game. If you actually complete the game. If you complete the game, then the bragging rights come in the form of this game. You have probably noticed that it has received more than one review. The major reason you have not heard about this game is because people who reviewed this game for personal gain. It is my hope that this review will be unbiased. I have not bashed any one part of the game. This game does exist because of the people who played it. The people who played this game, people who have seen this game. People who have not played this game. This game exists for all the people who played it. The people who played it for the 1st time, the people who have played it time and time again. This game exists and it has had it's time. The people who played this game are the people who have played this game. The people who have not played this game are the people who have not played this game. The people who will never play this game are the people who will never play this game. This game isn't for you. It is for the people who play it. Windows and Mac DOSBox support. Online community at www.gitgud.com If you have an issue with it please report it to them.
