Some people say the most romantic thing you can do for the one you love is to ask them to marry you. It's more romantic than chocolate or diamond rings, and it makes the true love part of the relationship official, so to speak. But to be honest, most people don't do this. They don't do it because they haven't thought it through, they haven't talked to their friends and family, and they haven't done the work to make sure that they're ready to take this step. It's time to take the leap, to get clear and be honest with yourself and with the one you love.

It may seem scary, but remember, you're just asking someone to marry you. Start by talking to your friends and family. Ask them how they'd feel if their daughter or son was going to marry someone other than the person they love. Give it your best shot. It's better to find out the hard way rather than find out it's too late. But don't talk to them at a bad time, either. It's not romantic to be told that you're too old, or too young, too rich, too poor, too fat, or too thin to marry someone. Those are time-of-the-month feelings and they will get in the way of a real discussion. Talk to people at a good time, when you have some perspective on what's happening with you and your partner. Next, talk to your pastor or a priest. They won't take sides, and they will give you a realistic and loving opinion. Talk to your partner. You two should have talked this through before asking your parents. The two of you should have decided the situation in which you want to marry. Don't make it a surprise.

You should know that asking for their blessing is just one of the ways that you show your love. If this is a new relationship and you don't know anything about that person, then you might want to use this opportunity to get to know them more before taking a step like this. If your family and
