Early life Culpepper was born in Somerset, England, to parents whom she has described as "C-list celebrities." As a child, she lived in Egypt, Australia and New Zealand, where her father worked as a respected children's author; her early interest in acting blossomed there. She graduated from Connecticut College. She also studied acting at The New School in New York City. Acting career Culpepper's career in show business, after transferring to New York, began when she played a young girl opposite Sal Mineo on Broadway in Jesus Christ Superstar. Her next role was as Mary Rose McBride in the national touring company of the Broadway musical Barefoot in the Park. She has also been the understudy to Marlon Brando's memorable turn as Cheyenne in A Streetcar Named Desire on Broadway; the role was later taken by Stanley Kowalski. Other stage credits include the original London productions of Steppenwolf, Willy Loman in Death of a Salesman and Fall of the House of Usher. She won the Obie Award for her performance as Diana in the award-winning revival of Dennis Potter's Dennis Potter's Bloody Kids at the Royal National Theatre. In addition to these New York stage credits, Culpepper has appeared in numerous motion pictures and television productions. Her one-woman show, Songs of the Sun, is a personal, ultimately profane and sometimes-dark journey, exploring the origins of her talent as a singer, written with her long-
