Evidence for this hypothesis is provided by the paradoxical effect of a 5-HT~3~ antagonist on the hypermotility induced by a stimulus such as electric shock \[\[@B3],[@B7]\], which is an effect that could not be explained by 5-HT receptor antagonists at the level of the small intestine. It is thus possible that a 5-HT~3~ receptor antagonist would be more effective in animals with dysmotility in the large intestine, as reported in Fuda et al. \[\[@B13]\] and described in the current results. To test this hypothesis, the 5-HT~3~ antagonist should be administered at the level of the large intestine. The results of the present study are inconsistent with a previous report in rats \[\[@B14]\], in which the 5-HT~3~ antagonist accelerated the postoperative colonic transit. A possible explanation for this discrepancy is that the previously observed acceleration of colonic transit by 5-HT<sub>3</sub> antagonists was a true pharmacological effect and not a result of bowel obstruction. Bowel obstruction was not observed in the present study and is unlikely because the 5-HT<sub>3</sub> antagonist was administered only postoperatively. Another explanation is that the previous study used a low

We are not a site for those who just want to see all the content available in one place, we are a site for book lovers and if you are one too you may want to check them out. Most of our authors are ordinary people that are writing their experiences and opinions on the internet, that's why you will find that some of their works are funny, others are depressing, others are informative, and others just plain interesting.

Q: How can I secure wpf forms? I am trying to find a secure way to create forms in WPF. I need that a user must be authenticated in order to view the data (its a kind of password protected data). I have heard about disabling the click events on the toolbars, but with no result. In the case of sending data from the main form to a second (or more) forms, I thought I would be able to use a binding path on the source of the second form, but this seems to not work.

A: the solution I ended up using was to use a pivot element so that the user cant modify the source object. I also had to use a dependency property for the inputField element since the child object (the "readonly" control) is pretty much useless without a parent. In order to get the data to the child form I use the "DoWork" of the Click event on the pivot.

Q: Can't find the reason for the exception, why doesn't it throw an error? try { System.out.println(list.get(0).getX()); System.out.println(list.get(0).getY()); } catch (ArrayIndexOutOfBoundsException e) { System.out.println("Here"); } In the sample program above, the index out of bounds exception is not thrown. Why is that? A: Your list may be null. That would cause an ArrayIndexOutOfB
