POWER USERS' CLINIC: Making the Most of Layer Masks In the following few pages, you see how to use various special effects and masks in Photoshop. In practice, you rarely need to create masks and filter effects by hand. When a special effect or filter is applied to an image, it is applied to a single layer. The effect is applied to the whole image, but only the selected area(s) actually changes, which is why it is called a mask. A mask is an effect that is applied to a single layer. You can create a mask by using the Selection tool or by using the Pen tool. A mask is composed of a vector path that specifies the area to be affected. So to create the same effect to a different area of the image, you simply change the path location. In addition, you can change the way the effect is applied to the layer. For example, if you wanted to add a new path that is an inverted copy of the first one, but with a different fill and stroke (paint color) applied, you could use a path as a mask. Tip Filters sometimes change the shape of an object. If you want

Indirect calorimetry techniques were used to evaluate the gluconeogenic response to two different situations involving an increased energy expenditure: 1) To evaluate the ability of induced thermogenesis to increase energy expenditure in healthy subjects, the measurements of O_2 consumption and CO_2 production were carried out during the whole period of exposure to different environmental temperatures. The thermodynamic properties of the examined metabolic reactions were also investigated. 2) To evaluate the ability of induced thermogenesis to increase energy expenditure in healthy subjects, the increase in O_2 consumption and CO_2 production, and in the rate of gluconeogenesis, was determined in patients affected by obesity who, during metabolic tests, showed a significant increase of VO2 during the first 30 min of exposure to low ambient temperatures, while VO2 was unchanged in the control test in the presence of thermoneutrality. An increase in VO2, induced by hypothermia or hyperthermia, correlated with an increased rate of gluconeogenesis and a decreased rate of free fatty acids.Ed.2d at 324, 95 S.Ct. at 1142).
