Note: The name "Photoshop" stems from the word photo (imagine Photoshop as "photo shop"): the tools, actions, and features found in Photoshop were designed to help you manipulate photos. To open a Photoshop file, most computers come with the program preinstalled, but you may be able to install it on a separate drive or from the Adobe website. When you open Photoshop, a graphical interface greets you. This interface allows you to sort your files by name, type (JPEG, BMP, or TIFF, for example), file size, date created, and location. You can also do a search for a file by its name, but the most recent files take priority. In the left side of the interface are some tools for organizing your photos. Under the "Organize" heading, you'll see the "Alphabetical Lists" section, which gives you the ability to browse by directory, type, name, and size. At the bottom of the screen, you'll see your open files, grouped by the folders or paths (images stored directly on the hard drive) that they're stored in. Right below that is a "Home" button that opens the same interface with your files already loaded. If you don't have any open files, you'll see a message on the "File" menu that says, "You don't have any open files." You can drag the open file list onto the Home button to return to the open file list without having to open an image. The top menu includes tools for managing, or manipulating, your open files, as well as a setting for the default zoom size. The top menu also includes tools that are helpful for organizing your images, including "Open" to open a file, "Close" to close the current file, "Save" to save your current file, "Zoom In" to zoom in on an image, and "Zoom Out" to zoom out (and "Zoom Reset" to zoom to the default size). The "File" menu lets you perform some basic tasks such as import/export, Save, and Save As. You can also use it to open a new image, format the image, set the size, convert it to grayscale, change the quality, and generally tweak the image. The Edit menu contains the tools for managing your "layers," which are like windows that you can place on top of or next to one another. You can

What's New in the Photoshop 2022 (Version 23.1.1)?

The EIB is increasing its support for the Middle East and North Africa region. The funding announced on 17 March represents EUR 180 million of new EIB support for the five-year period 2014-2018. This is part of the EUR 739 million in total support provided to the region from the EIB during this period. The Middle East and North Africa region is the EIB's main priority for aid. "These new support lines will help finance critical infrastructure projects to improve living conditions, including in the areas of energy and transportation," said EIB Vice-President Carmen M. Moreno-Mateu. "These funds will also finance development initiatives in support of the 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development." Support for the Palestinian Authority (PA), which is committed to the UN Sustainable Development Goals, will be part of a new support line for the Palestinian Territories. This will support critical investment needed to ensure a strong and sustainable local economy, and to support reforms in the Palestinian private sector. EIB support will also finance a youth employment programme and a job creation initiative for the private sector in the Palestinian Territories. New support lines for Ethiopia, Jordan and Kenya will finance infrastructure and sector development in addition to hydropower. As part of this support, and in line with the EIB's and the World Bank's long-term strategic partnership for the Middle East and North Africa, the EIB will finance the construction of the Grand Renaissance Dam on the Blue Nile. This will serve as an important source of hydropower generation in Ethiopia, which is a critical priority in the EIB's long-term strategy for the region. Support for the Egyptian private sector will be financed through a new line of support to promote SMEs and projects in Egypt's private sector. The EIB will support the attraction of Egyptian and Gulf private sector investments as part of the 2015 Programme of Investment Opportunities for Foreign Direct Investment in Egypt. In addition, this support will finance a contribution to education reform through the promotion of a more inclusive Egyptian educational model, which will increase diversity and enhance the country's competitiveness in the global economy. In Syria, the EIB will support the reconstruction of the economy. The support to be financed will support the Syrian private sector. The EIB will also support a more inclusive political transition and democratic governance in the country. Support will be provided for the National Pension Fund for Syrian Civilians, a government initiative that helps
