Warcraft II has been one of the most popular strategy games. The Blizzard Entertainment has released a revolutionary total conversion for PC called World of Warcraft. Now it's going to play a virtual reality game similar to it.

You're a mighty lord of the war, and lead the forces of Us, against the forces of the Burning Legion. Each battle is a surge of destruction and devastation, technology and magic moving by the wayside, to end - as in this strategy game - a long time ago. Combat takes place in a 3D universe, crafting of the war, up to thousands of soldiers have already fought, and now it's time for them to prove themselves in the title of the game. Each battles includes many stages, and in those battles you can raise certain units called Mofete. Attackers have another kind of units, called Damage units. They break through the protective shields of the Defensive formations and as they leave a destroyed area, both sides return to a neutral point, where they can rest and rearm themselves. The match ends as soon as all units have died. You take up arms in the Burning Legion campaign, explore the new lands of Valgarde, choose the army to command and train up units including but not limited to: Horde units, Goblin units, Alliance units, units for your recruits, Scepters and much more, and be victorious in the title of the war.

In the manual of the game the option of playing automatically in VR mode is described, so you can feel and enjoy the game in a virtual reality headset with motion controllers, supports mouse motion and much more.

What's new:

Arcsaber VR (), or ar:sab:r, is a multiplayer modified version of the popular FPS game Arma II. The basic concept is to bring together asynchronous multiplayer players online in a space-simulator environment where players can interact within the game or with friends and enemies outside of the game. History The word originates from the Far Eastern design theme Arca Sabre, or in English, "spinning blade". Along with the red, green and blue colors, it is one of the three colors used by the Colorful Revolution and is their official mascot. It's most likely to be the most well-known color combination in Arca Sabre, the only one actually derived from a color combo of real Far Eastern weapons; The red color was produced by the Battle of Grozny 1991, when the FDU was involved, and some years later at the Battle of Beslan of 9 September 2004, when the Okhrana troops were involved. In short, the ar:sab:r is a modern day successor to the popular and long-running game Arma combined with an asynchronous communication component that allows gaming communities of all sizes to stay on together while playing Arma II combined with this asynchronous communication software. Event history In the year 2006, the ar:sab:r was released as a private, limited-time alpha version that was licensed through GSC Game World, Interplay and CryTek studios. A version of ar:sab:r integrated with GameSpy Plus ("Plus" was a short lived GSC Game World-developed communications software program) was released with Big Momma's House. The development period was 4 months. During its development period it recorded over 400 hours of in-game, voice chat, lobby and in-game mastering. Additional game mastery work was outsourced to the South Korean Shooting Range. The low-latency code-base created by this quest was then used to produce the final ar:sab:r product with released on May 26, 2007. As of 2007 the Arcsaber (VR) application can be downloaded for free from this website. The following are some of the high-points of the ar:sab:r. In-game gaming: Space Simulator. not just a "Tabletop-goon" like Arma II. Gameplay advanced enough for online combat. All-round connectivity. As opposed to
