Note If you don't see the Photoshop application listed, choose Edit → Open. 2. Open an image and drag a new layer on top of the image layer. The image opens as a new layer on top of the original image. If you see the window where you'd normally enter a filename, you'll probably want to keep this window active for the moment; see the box on Tip to discuss the File menu's window settings options. 3. Using the Move tool (V), position the new layer directly over the image layer. The Move tool is a convenient tool for positioning new layers over the top of the image you selected. 4. Click to place the new layer where you want it and then press Enter (Return on a Mac) to create the new layer. Photoshop places the new layer where you click, but if you see the window where you enter a filename, you may have to cancel the event. If that happens, just press Enter (Return on a Mac) again to create the new layer. 5. If the layer doesn't appear where you want it, click once more at the position where you want the new layer to appear. The new layer opens to the center of the screen. 6. Click once more to resize the new layer. The new layer's edges snap to the outer edges of the image window. You can place multiple new layers over the top of the image and resize them all at the same time. 7. Click once on the left side of the new layer and then press Enter (Return) to select the entire layer. Pressing Enter (Return) selects the entire layer with a single click. If you see the File menu options, you can change the layer's _name_ (see the Tip on the following page) by clicking the "A" or "R" on the menu bar, and then clicking the current name. You can also turn off the _name_ (the little arrow at the bottom of the layer's thumbnail) by choosing Layer → Layer Options. 8. Repeat Steps 6 and 7 for each new layer that you want to place on the image.

Ubuntu 19.10 (Eoan Ermine) was released recently and as usual, the release team has a build, which is all packaged and ready to install and run. Building and running release updates are what we and the release team get paid to do. In the case of 19.10, I expect it to be a fairly straightforward install, but there are some changes that need to be made if you're installing from an Eoan daily image. If you're not going to be installing from the Daily Builds, which are available at: `#!/bin/bash apt-get update apt-get dist-upgrade apt-get install -y Software-properties-common build-essential build-essential:i386 libgl1-mesa-dev:i386 libgl1-mesa-dev:i386 libgl1-mesa-dev:i386 libxext6:i386 libxcursor1:i386 libgtk-3-0:i386` This script will download packages that aren't available in the daily build archives, then execute a dist-upgrade to get the build ready. I'm going to install the 19.10 daily build in Virtualbox on a Linux host as this saves having to keep things in sync manually and it's much quicker if it breaks. I have a 1TB virtual hard disk created by VirtualBox so I'm going to use that as the installation drive. If you don't have anything like that, create an empty VirtualBox disk image, for example: `# dd if=/dev/zero of=/tmp/20GB bs=1M count=1024 # mkfs.ext4 /tmp/20GB` Then, you can install 19.10 with this script. `# wget # dpkg -i linux-generic_5.0.0.7.8_amd64.deb` Then reboot, and you should be up and running. If it breaks you can always create an ISO from the LiveCD and run the script again. Development of a simple and cost-effective method for the isolation and purification of membrane proteins.
