I was down at the local Walsit somewhere during my wanderings in Texas in summer 2000. Yes folks, that's right. I was 14 in 2000.. I'm 34 now. It happens. Well I was and you may or may not know this, but they now have hawks still in Texas. Now every place has 'em, just not everywhere actually. This is a spot that I don't think I'm showing well, haha. But this is a stream that runs behind my house way up in East Texas after its been raining heavily. Now a trout creek like that, especially if it runs against anything, has to go around. Not this one though, it runs right into the back porch, but after a heavy rain it was full of holes and it had some dew in it. It was in the shade of a tree up under the porch, so it kept the dew from forming more than a small amount, heh heh. Anyway, after several days of rain, suddenly I had an empty cup. I checked the snakes. No snakes. Hmm. So I went and checked the moths, that's what it's called in southern lingo. I have several rainfly tents in the stream that I pull around each day, so I was willing to give it a try in that. This evening at dusk, I was out there fishing far out on the shallowest part of the creek. I had just spooked a few of the fish and they were running back to shore after seeing the disc, and I was set to fish again. I noticed about a dozen of my rainflies still hanging on a drooping planty type of thing that was submerged in the stream, and there were a few moths on that, so I put a small size leader on my new fishing pole and went to fish a little more. Well I spooked out a few fish, and by the time I landed them, the sun had already set and there was a low mist in the meadow. Anyhow, I pulled out my camera and I was capturing still photos, and a video for YouTube...heh heh. Almost no one can shoot video on that type of camera, but I love my 16meg D70 and all it
