We've spent some time with the Triumph V12R in the back of a Scrambler, and here's our first impressions. The engine is the same as the one in the "big" Scramblers, but has been tuned to give more power and torque. Triumph developed the engine with the aim of creating even more torque without increase engine speed. They've managed to do this by using Triumph's Digital Twin Throttle mapping and Throttle Bypass, a valve which when engaged increases the power by 14%. The increased power of the engine sees the Scrambler pushing its weighty and heavy Scrambler nature all the way, and the ride is even more impressive with the engine. The motor is available with either a single 43mm carburettor or a Keihin four-into-one fuel injection unit. Alongside the new engine is a brand new exhaust system which uses a larger diameter silencer and a more efficient EFI system. Triumph say that the new exhaust works more like a tuned down engine and allows the bike to sound like a good street bike even when in Sport, or Off-Road, modes. The engine is also lighter which means that Scrambler owners can run the engine with bigger tyres, which makes for an even better riding experience. We're not sure when the Scramblers will be hitting the road, but when they do, they should cost no more than £10,000. Triumph are aiming to make the Scrambler the best dirt bike around. They've been testing the Scrambler at the Red Bull Crashed Ice race and are confident that their new long
