The injury compromised JaVale McGee's season, but on the floor, the 22-year-old forward proved to be a valuable piece for a team that seems to have the best shot at going all the way this season. For two seasons, it was the Bobcats that brought him into the lineup in a time share and he did enough to earn the trust of Coach Steve Clifford. But with Dwight Howard now gone, the C's have to rely on McGee to be more of a leader on the court. Throughout the past two years, McGee has improved his defense and seems more comfortable with his role. McGee said: "I think I have a better understanding of the league. Last year, I was more of the rookie, you know, "Where do I fit in?" I have more experience. This year, I feel like I have a better understanding of how all the things around the league work." "I feel like I have a good relationship with my teammates," added McGee, who averaged 3.7 points and 3.5 rebounds per game last season. "I feel like I have some leadership responsibility. I feel like, in the past couple of years, I've done a better job of the intangibles." Though the big man is no longer with the team, he will still play a major role. "No matter who is on the team," said McGee, who is averaging 12.8 points and 6.8 rebounds in limited minutes with the team. "No matter what. We're all a part of it. We all have a role to play." McGee is glad to be with the team now and can't wait for the long road trip on Tuesday. "I'm a hell of a lot happier," he said. "I was happy last year when I was in the league. I was happy every single day last year. But now, I'm doing what I've always dreamed about." And that dream is a ring. "I mean, I'm from North Carolina, so you really look at yourself," said McGee, who played at the University of North Carolina. "But I'm from Brooklyn. I'm from Orlando

Preclinical evaluation of an anti-Ang1 antibody for vascular injury. The antagonist TSR-410 prevents vascular injury in experimental models and is currently being developed as a new therapeutic agent for the treatment of vascular injury and other thrombo- ischemic diseases. We performed a preclinical evaluation of TSR-410 in comparison with Tirofiban, a second-generation small-molecule antagonist of the transforming growth factor beta1, against thrombin-induced thrombosis and endothelial damage in ex vivo arterio-venous shunt as well as in collagen and wire-induced carotid injury in rats. We also performed a multicentric preclinical pharmacokinetic and toxicity study to evaluate the preclinical profile of TSR-410. After a single intravenous or oral administration of TSR-410, the plasma level was sustained over 14 days. In a time-course study of intravenous bolus injection, its half-life was 6.9 hr. After intravitreal administration, there was a slow absorption phase of about 1 week, where the maximum concentration of about 90 ng/mL was reached approximately 2 days after administration. TSR-410 showed a significant inhibition of both platelet deposition and coagulation activity in thrombosis models. Tirofiban did not show this effect. In the ex vivo arterio-venous shunt, we could show that TSR-410, but not Tirofiban, significantly inhibited thrombin-induced platelet adhesion and aggregation, as well as platelet-induced tissue factor release. Furthermore, TSR-410 significantly protected the endothelial integrity from thrombin-induced endothelial damage. In experimental carotid and wire-induced carotid injury, TSR-410 significantly reduced thrombus formation, whereas it did not have an effect on arterial wall lesion. TSR-410 was well tolerated, and no deaths, significant body weight changes, or obvious toxic effects were observed in a 15-week pharmacokinetic and toxicity study. TSR-410 potently inhibits platelet-tissue factor interaction and thrombin-induced blood vessel injury both in vitro and in vivo. Increased levels of matrix metalloproteinases-2 and-9 and decreased levels of tissue inhibitors of metalloproteinases-2 and -3 in serum of patients with Behcet's disease. Inflammation, particularly the innate immune response, contributes to the path
