From launch players can be seen hurtling toward the ball, grappling with their opponents and winning their own and their opponents' headers. The improvements created as a result of "HyperMotion" are especially evident in the passing and shooting mechanics that adapt to players' natural movement. For example, instead of players having to slow their movements to manipulate the ball, the ball now behaves as a body part and players can make it do their bidding. The ‘HyperMotion’ team even got to share a few pints at a Premier League team’s training session. The FIFA 22 team started their work from the ground up, looking at how real players move and interact in everyday life to create a game that models the speed, power, intensity and technical skill that you would see in the real game. They spent hundreds of hours studying movement data recorded from live matches. The data collected from the motion capture suits was used to create real-life animations for players, including ball physics, player collisions and ball touches. The animations in FIFA 22 introduce new and improved animations for tackles,
