I have Windows 10, and I have no idea how to do this. I have an iPad and a MacBook. I want to be able to send a MIDI file to my MacBook so that I can play it on the iPad. How can I do this? I have tried everything on the internet but nothing works. Any help would be much appreciated. You could have all your devices sync through iOS or iCloud. I'm not sure I'm understanding the question fully. You want to play your MIDI file on your laptop and your iPad. Can you do that? If so, you would have to buy the iPad adaptor. The iPad adaptor will allow you to connect your iPad to your laptop via USB. It does not mean that you will be able to play it on your iPad. Your iPad will act as your host device. So, you'll need software on both devices to access this. If you have iOS devices, then you need the iPhone/iPad/iPod touch app. If you have Mac, then you need Garage Band or Logic. If you have a PC, then you need a sound card that has internal MIDI playback. To play the files on your iPad, you'd need to set up a host (Mac, PC, or Apple) that has the software and the proper devices connected. And then you can transfer MIDI files from your Mac to the host and listen to them. It's mostly a software issue that you are not able to do anything. Use of these devices is very complicated. I just want to add that there are also other ways of syncing notes between the devices. You can either use Bluetooth or depending on your software, you can actually stream MIDI across devices in sync. That's how

I synced my iPhone with my Mac. you can also use the old fashioned Ipod (which is what the adaptor does I think) to get the notes over. If your laptop uses MIDI input, you can get audio in and out. My mac model doesn't have built-in midi input, so I had to buy a midi to usb external adapter. Of course, that meant there was no way to connect it to the ipad. I was able to get my 3rd party music studio to sync with the ipad, so I could just show off my compositions to guests without lugging around my laptop. I was using "Virtual DJ" to sync
