"I am running for governor because I know the problems we are facing as a commonwealth are too big for any one person," Fairchild said in the video, which she uploaded to YouTube. "If you have a broken system, then you have a governor who can fix it. If you have a system that is not functioning, then you have a governor who will put people to work. If you have a commonwealth with no tangible investments in children, then you have a governor who will make sure every child is loved." Fairchild (D) is likely the frontrunner for the nomination, as Gov. Terry McAuliffe and Lt. Gov. Ralph Northam are also running. A drop-out by McAuliffe and Northam could open the door for a more liberal candidate such as current Lt. Gov. Northam, who is a potential state Supreme Court justice. Fairchild has a strong following in Northern Virginia
