There are three basic types of tools in Photoshop. Fill tools specify the overall color of an image. You use a fill tool to paint over an area with a single color, or create a specific hue, similar to a paint color. Adjustment tools allow you to adjust the balance of light and dark pixels within an image. Adjustment tools work on the color of individual pixels. Overlay tools cover an image section specified by the brush, mask, or shape tool. The more subtle the adjustment is, the more precise it works. To increase the degree of the adjustment, overshoot techniques and soft edges are used.

Edge blending provides for gradual concealment of pixels near the edge of the image. That's good—because there's a lot to learn in Photoshop!
