Antigenic specificity of human T-lymphotropic virus type 1 variants of differing pathogenic potential. The antigenic specificity of HTLV-I isolates was compared in order to determine whether the HTLV-I pathogenic potential was associated with alterations in either Env or Tax coding regions. The human T-cell line MT2-H7, which is infected by a transmissible HTLV-I variant, was used as an in vitro infection model. All of the tested proviral isolates encoded a major HTLV-I Env protein with the same HXB2 sequence. The HTLV-I variant HTLV-I6 was found to bear the EK1 epitope, which is commonly observed in the HTLV-I envelope glycoprotein in specimens from patients with adult T-cell leukemia/lymphoma. Additionally, this variant encodes a Tax protein with a deletion of 12 amino acids near its C-terminus. Two other HTLV-I variants, HTLV-I29 and HTLV-I8/B, which can cause malignant transformation of peripheral blood T cells, were found to encode a HTLV-I Env protein with a unique amino acid sequence that exhibited minimal HLA class I or class II binding. These results indicate that, in vitro, the transmissible variant HTLV-I6 causes cellular transformation because of the Env epitope. Additionally, the unique amino acid sequence of the HTLV-I Env protein encoded by the non-transmissible variants is involved in their pathogenic potential for inducing cellular transformation.Q: jQuery onclick event doesn't work I have a div hi I want the "hi" to be displayed in a specific color, when you click on it. I want it to happen with jQuery but it doesn't work. EDIT: Using the "hide()" method is the solution that @schmoo-brudel pointed out. A: Use the "hide" method. It works like
